

Start Up // Riding the Urban Waves

"This is the opposite of Cancun," says Anthony Stallone, founder of the New York City-based Jetty Jumpers. "There, when you rent a ski, you're only given 2,500 square feet—you're driving in circles." It's true, you don't need an ocean or a large lake to enjoy riding personal watercraft. With access to the tristate waterways, Stallone and his crew cruise freely. Unlike riders trying to perfect tricks, the urban ski movement is about exploration. With Jetty Jumpers, a cruise gets you up close to the Statue of Liberty and the Brooklyn Bridge. Louisville, Miami, Toledo, Baltimore, San Francisco and Houston also have clubs that encourage exploration via the urban waterways.

How: Anyone with access to a personal watercraft and a waterway can enjoy a unique tour through the city. Many modern PWC hold three or four people and have room for a picnic basket or cooler, so get ready to spend an entire day on the water. Make sure to check local laws, as you may need to take classes before riding. And it's a good idea to travel in groups until you learn the safe routes.

When: Depending on where you live, spring and summer might be the best time for a ride.

But since many waterways, including those around Manhattan, stay ice-free year-round, it isn't uncommon to see a wetsuit warrior buzzing around in January. —Brooke Morton
